Matt Bowman is a Senior Professional Staff Member on the House Small Business Committee under Ranking Member Nydia Velazquez, where he has served for nearly seven years. His work covers a wide range of economic policy issues, including tax, trade, health care and innovation. He leads the Committee's oversight of the SBA's disaster lending program and is currently on the team negotiating reauthorization of the Small Business Innovation Research and Technology Transfer programs. During his tenure on the Committee, he played a role in the response to the COVID-19 pandemic and led research into anti-competitive practices affecting small firms. He earned his bachelor's degree in political science from James Madison University in 2019.
