

Yvette R. Seger, PhD

Yvette R. Seger, PhD (she/her), is an accomplished science policy professional with over 20 years' experience supporting the biomedical research community at organizations spanning the nonprofit, federal, and private sectors. She is recognized for her ability to build consensus among diverse scientific stakeholders, shape national biomedical research policy, and lead high-impact initiatives in STEM workforce development, data sharing, and research sustainability. Dr. Seger holds a PhD in Genetics from Stony Brook University and a BA in Zoology (Genetics Concentration) and Politics & Government from Ohio Wesleyan University.